1. The Salem witch trials were an opportunity for neighbors to vent against neighbors, to publicly air long - standing jealousy, to accuse those they disliked, all while sounding righteous and religious! What foreshadowing of vengeful accusations occurs in Act I?

  2. Reverend Parris is weeping and praying over his daughter Betty's bed. What evidence is there in Act 1 that Reverend Parris is far more concerned about something other than his daughter's well-being?

  3. Thomas Putnam is portrayed as a vindictive man, greatly concerned about money. The narrator also finds it interesting that his daughter led the crying -out when - but here the narrator stops, although by now it is clear that some of Thomas Putnam's interests, perhaps financial, were at stake. Putnam insists to the Rev. Parris that there are evil spirits at work here. Moreover, Mrs. Putnam chime sin that she has had seven babies die. She admits she sent her daughter Ruth to Tituba, who knows how to speak to the dead, to find out who or what is ailing her daughter. Based on what we have read, what can be said about the Putnam's motives and character?
